Are we prepared? PACE International Reveals Gaps in Facilities' Preparedness to Respond to Terrorist Attacks

Facilities that have been identified as potentially attractive targets for a terrorist attack due to the presence of large volumes of hazardous materials have not done an adequate job of preventing and preparing for such an event. These are the findings of a survey conducted by the Paper, Allied-Industrial, Chemical & Energy Workers (PACE) International Union of its local unions in the chemical, paper, oil refining and other industries.

International Association of Fire Fighters Press Release

With NIEHS support, the IAFF is working with Local Union affiliates, the Office of Homeland Security, and the Office of the Governor in Arizona to support a cooperative training project. They have delivered a bi-lingual, on-the-Trainer program (additional courses to be added) to a group of bi-lingual worker trainers who will, in turn, deliver a series of HazMat First Responder, WMD and Confined Space courses to emergency responders in Arizona, as well as emergency responders from their "sister unions" across the border in Mexico. General Manager Schaitberger has been leading efforts to protect our responders and this approach will significantly increase safety and preparedness on both sides of the border.
