

COVID Train-the-Trainer Results in Puerto Rico

An Update from the Sustainable Workplace Alliance

Each of the SWA trainers participated in the COVID Train-the-trainer program delivered by the International Chemical Workers Union Council (ICWUC). This twelve-hour course was conducted over three weeks and was the first COVID TTT program delivered by ICWUC.

The picture in the middle shows a graduate of the TTT program providing training to his volunteers as they prepare to provide COVID awareness training in the Bo Lomas community in Puerto Rico.

Our trainers have been busy staging small training events in various barrios to teach local residents how to better protect themselves, their families and their communities during the COVID pandemic.

In this example we partnered with MMM, the leading plan provider in health services under the Medicare Advantage segment in Puerto Rico.

MMM is focused on improving the quality of life of its members, and by working with SWA, MMM was able to provide valuable COVID healthcare training to limit the spread of the COVID virus.

In this example we partnered with a COVID testing site in the Municipality of Canóvanas.

As the site received residents for COVID testing, our trainers provided COVID related training and answered questions. Additionally, we handed out masks and hand sanitizer to the residents.

SWA partnered with faith-based organizations and churches to provide COVID training to the community in small groups. This example was conducted in Bayamon, Puerto Rico.

COVID training for first responders was conducted outdoors in San Juan for Unit 51 State and homeland security volunteers.

Additional small COVID training sessions were conducted for community-based first responders, this one in the barrio of Cubuy. The picture on the left shows Mr. Edgar Ortiz of the Emergency Management Task Force (EMTF) preparing to deliver training using an NIEHS developed presentation.

In an effort to reach our target communities with COVID training, we partnered with various community-based non-profits including Producir Inc. a private, non-profit corporation founded in 1986. Producir is dedicated to community economic and social development, based on the empowerment of residents of the sectors of Cubuy-Lomas and its surrounding areas in the Municipality of Canóvanas. The audience they serve includes the whole family, children and youth. Producir encourages self-management, micro-businesses and entrepreneurship through agriculture, home-based business and handicrafts to help the economic development of the family and therefore the community.
